

Olympics Success Around the World

Author: Khushi Chaturvedi

Date: March 2026

Data Story Overview:

This dashboard looks at more than a century of Olympic history to answer a key question: which countries lead in the Olympics, and does a nation's wealth influence this? It uses athlete level Olympic data from 1896 to 2016, along with World Bank GDP per capita figures. The dashboard shows that a small number of wealthy nations, especially the United States, Russia, Germany, and Great Britain, have regularly earned the most medals in both Summer and Winter Games. The visualizations not only display the large number of medals won by these leading nations but also illustrate the worldwide participation in the Olympics. This picture of achievement is shaped by both sports' tradition and financial resources.

Dashboard Charts:

Chart 1: Count of Medals by Nation (Stacked Bar Chart)

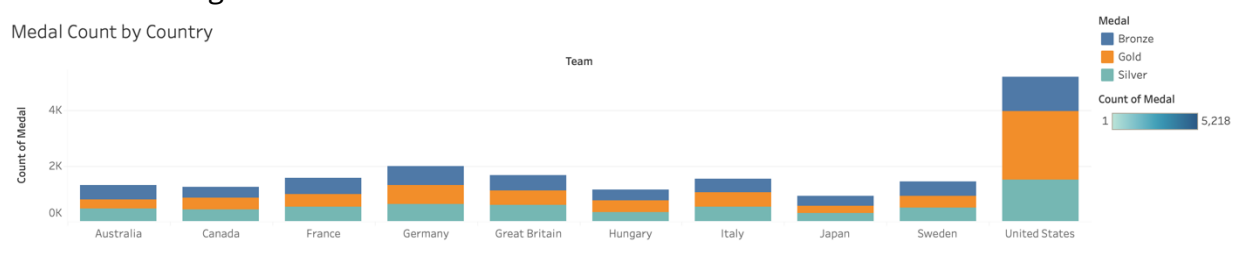

The top ten medal winning nations in history are shown in this stacked bar chart, with each bar broken down by medal type: gold (orange), silver (teal), and bronze (blue). With more than 5,000 medals overall, the United States is far ahead of all other countries. Viewers can compare the percentage of each medal type by nation in addition to the total number of medals thanks to the stacked format.

Chart 2: Worldwide Medal Distribution (World Map)

The choropleth world map uses a light-to-dark blue gradient to shade each nation according to the total number of Olympic medals it has won. More medals are indicated by darker hues. The map immediately shows that the strongest Olympic regions are North America, Western Europe, and parts of Asia; large portions of Africa, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia have won relatively fewer medals, which is consistent with GDP trends from the second dataset.
